“Mrs. Linda was my husband's first cousin once removed. When we first met her and her son Jess, my husband's second cousin, we immediately felt kinship.

I had the opportunity to enjoy intimate conversation with Mrs. Linda. She'd keep me company while I cared for my babies and the men were out fishing or shooting. We are both college educated, yet agreed that there was too much focus on credentials when true intelligence is nothing save simple curiosity. I studied in Turkey previously and she's bring me articles asking what I thought about current events in the Republic. We also were of the same mind that ultimately, we treasured staying home and caring for our families when the rest of the world seemed caught up in academic or material success. She had gained much wisdom in her rich life, and as I've written down all of our conversations in a diary I have composed for posterity's sake I am now lament these entries will come to an end.

We unfortunately were not informed of her passing until a month after the service and thus could not pay our respects. My husband in particular thrived on the connection after being separated from his home and family for so long. My son has built lasting memories at her home and recognises the house when we drive by, asking to visit.

We are grateful for the seemingly small but in actuality lasting and endearing hospitality that Mrs. Linda showed us. We were honoured to be counted as family.

“ My Aunt Linda was a fascinating and vivacious woman. I was always impressed with her intelligence, her Ph.D., and her admirable career as a college professor. She and I had wonderful conversations about movies and books. She also had a lot of love for her family and pets. I will miss her very much, and I send condolences to the rest of Linda's family and friends.

“ My cousin, Linda, was a VERY interesting person. She always had an adventurous spirit and enjoyed discovering the world. She was very accomplished in the academic field and also in the day-to-day world. I am extremely thankful to have shared so much in life with her.
